

There is no way to easily find if restaurants have the specific food that the user wants while accommodating their dietary needs.

Who is experiencing this problem?

People who have allergies to food or are following a certain type of diet like vegan or vegetarians.

What is the problem?

The problem is when people have dietary restrictions, they first have to look for restaurants and food places that accommodate them. Then they have to see what these places have they can eat. This takes time, energy, and effort to find something they want that accommodates their allergy and restrictions. It is difficult to find a specific food they want while accommodating their dietary restrictions.

Where does the problem happen?

The problem happens virtually wherever you are because wherever you go, finding options that accommodate dietary restrictions is hard and time consuming.

Why does this matter?

This is important because people don't want to spend their time searching for businesses that provide what they are looking for in accordance with their diet. People need an effortless way to search for what they would like to eat that satisfies their diet. Thus, restaurants would not lose the business of people who have these dietary restrictions.